1.1. DESCRIPTION OF THE PROGRAMME

The EMSE curriculum covers a wide range of topics, such as software process management, verification and validation, software design, requirements engineering and advanced topics including software quality, distributed systems and development, global software development, embedded systems and open source software & agile development.

1.2. STRUCTURE OF THE PROGRAMME

The curriculum consists of modules (divided into foundations and advanced topics in Software Engineering), a mandatory Internship, a Summer School and a Master thesis.

The full structure can be accessed at <http://em-se.eu/index.php/the-programme/>.

The Programme foresees a mobility period in two different Partner Universities of EMSE Consortium. A mobility track is one of such mobility period in which the student spends one year in one University (i.e., first university) and one year in another University (i.e., second university). A learning path is a study plan defined on a specific mobility track. The learning paths are accessible at <http://em-se.eu/index.php/study-plan/>.

The Internship and the Master thesis will be carried out during the second year (on the third semester for the Internship). The Master thesis will be jointly supervised and evaluated by two supervisors, one from each University attended by the student (for more information please consult: <http://em-se.eu/index.php/exams-and-thesis/>).

1.3. GRADUATES' PROFILE

Overall, students will gain a solid knowledge to be applied as managers in software companies, IT specialist and/or applied researchers in academia. The Programme prepares students to continue with doctoral studies in Empirical Software Engineering (ESE) as well. The typical profiles of an EMSE graduate include:
